

it's ok to tell someone...because he won't

The Humane Society of the United States in Washington, DC raises millions of dollars with heartbreaking images of dogs and cats, but in 2008 it shared less than one-half of one percent of its budget with hands-on pet shelters. HSUS executives put more than five times as much in their pension plans.

If you work inside HSUS and you've witnessed people diverting funds away from helpless pets, please write to info@humanewatch.org to report it confidentially. Don't delay. Animals need that money more than HSUS's lawyers.

To learn more information that the Humane Society of the United States keeps from its own employees, visit www.humanewatch.org

HUMANEWATCH.ORG
Keeping a watchful eye on the Humane Society of the United States